HOW PAPA CAUGHT THE BURGLAR.

1. Papa—Well, this will tickle Willie to death.

2. Papa (awakening in the middle of the night)—What noise was that? I guess I'll go downstairs and—

3. Well, I've got you, my way.

Cause for Thanks.

"How is Rawhide Jim the stage-driver, getting along?" inquired the editor of the Clarion on Christmas Day. "I understand that he went through a very painful experience yesterday."

"Yes," replied Alkali Ike. "He had three grass widows in the stage when he started out from Market City, and he thought they acted like they were fired of their single blessedness and had designs on him. According to him, he drove all the way with the four miles layin' right out straight at 'em pourin' the whip to 'em with both hands. He was so agitated that he never knew when he lost a couple of the mailbags on the way an' ran over a backboard with two tourists in it, an' tore the whole outfit. Easterners an' all, durra near to atoms. He kept his head turned back toward the widows, ready to abandon the stage at the first hostile movement on the part of the ladies. He twisted his foot neck so that when he finally climbed down from the stage at the end of the journey he walked backward. Now the business men are cussin' him for losin' their mail, the postmaster is after him for neglect of duty, the tourists are talkin' of havin' him arrested for assault with intent to kill, the owner of the backboard wants damages, an' the widows were so flattered by his continual notice that they have sent for him to call on 'em. Dr. Slade is tryin' to straighten his neck, an' not knowin' which direction he had twisted it around from to the first place, twisted it still further the wrong way till it sorter locked an' stuck fast, an' now won't turn in either direction."

"Well, well! This will be a painful Christmas for him!"

"Wal, yes; but from his point of view it ain't as bad as it might have been. He's the thankfullest man in town to-day. He says that but for the smile of Providence one of them widows might just as well have been the wife that he lost back yonder in the States when he sorter hopped out between days some three years ago."

"Why, say," he said, so he cautiously settled himself in a chair with a soft cushion, "would you like Christmas if you were a minister's little boy? Would you be pinning for it and lying awake nights waiting for it to get here? I don't think! Just think of all the big, hard-soled slippers a minister gets on every Christmas tree!"

Keeping His Word.

African Explorer (unfounded)—What, you, Clarence Vere de Vere, in the heart of darkest Africa!

Clarence Vere de Vere—I'm wearing the necktie Miss Darling gave me for Christmas. I promised her I would, you know!

New Way to Catch Fish.

A new apparatus for catching fish is a pair of spring jaws, attached to the end of a pole, which is slowly dropped down over the fish until within striking distance, when a spring trigger in the hand causes the jaws to shut, holding the fish firmly.

Infantile Deduction.

"I guess papa had got much money this year," said little brother.

"What makes you think so?" asked little sister.

"Cause he was telling me that it wasn't right to impose on Santa Claus just because the old fellow was good natured."

Roasted pig is the chief d'oeuvre at Christmas dinner in China.

GENEROUS FELLOW.

He stood quite near the mistletoe, and snatched full many a kiss. Until almost intoxicated. By so much excess bliss; Then happily remarks, the while His head with rapture whirled: "I wish the clouds were mistletoe And all the people girls."

AN OLD ENGLISH CUSTOM.

A remarkable celebration in honor of St. Nicholas by the Boy Bishop.

Perhaps the most remarkable of all celebrations in honor of St. Nicholas was the old one of the Boy Bishop. The boy bishop assumed his office on St. Nicholas' Day, December 6, and held it till Holy Innocents' Day, December 28. The custom originated on the continent of Europe, and was adopted in England, where it reached what was probably its fullest development. A boy was chosen to represent a bishop and was clothed with all the robes and invested with all the insignia pertaining to the station. Other boys represented priests, deacons and other suitable persons for the bishop's train. The boy bishop conducted a service in the church, and in some cases he and his companions went about from house to house singing and collecting money, which they did not ask as a gift, but demanded as a right.

The boy bishop attained his fullness of dignity at Salisbury Cathedral, though he was known all over England. There he was chosen from among the choir boys, the best forming his retinue, and he ruled with the highest pomp and most absolute authority. He is said to have conducted all the services of the church except the mass. In some other places the boy bishop is said to have celebrated the mass itself. If any prebend fell vacant in his term of office he filled it, and if he died before his term expired he was buried with all the honors due to a genuine bishop. There is record of a boy bishop at Salisbury filling a vacant prebend by the appointment of his schoolmaster, and there is in the cathedral there the tomb of one who died while holding his office. On the top of it is an effigy of the child in full episcopal robes.

Such masquerading plays as this were not then deemed offensive or derogatory to the dignity of the church. In fact, much coarser and more unbecoming exhibitions were freely permitted on some occasions, even to the extent of burlesques of the services of the church within its own walls. Of course, the evil and discreditable side was bound to be seen in time, and the functions of the boy bishop were at last forbidden by Henry VIII. They were restored, however, for a time by Mary. The peculiar custom at Eton known as the monition is supposed to have originated in that of the boy bishop, but the monition is too large a subject to be discussed here.

1. "Here is the goat Willie has always wanted. I'd like to see him when he opens his eyes in the morning."

2. Next morning.

High Tones.

A well-known aeronaut has noticed that the voice of a woman is audible in a balloon at the height of about two miles, while that of a man has never reached higher than a mile.

The Timid Led by the Blind.

"I saw a most remarkable occurrence on the street the other day," said a professional man, "and it made a deep impression on me. A lady came down Euclid avenue and stopped at the corner of Bond street. She evidently wanted to cross to the other side of the avenue. She was not a young woman, and did not look strong."

"There was quite a jam of vehicles in the street—motor cars, wagons and bicycles—and she seemed a little timid about making the passage. As she hesitated, a man came up Bond street and passed behind her. He was a well-dressed man, and carried a heavy case, which I noticed he used constantly, as if he might be a little lame."

"Sir," said the lady to him, "can I ask you to offer me the protection of your arm in crossing the street?"

"She said this in a very sweet and ladylike way, and the man with the case touched his hat."

"Certainly, madam," he replied, and offered his arm. As they crossed the street I followed close behind them. The man with the case was very vigilant. He halted several times, but they reached the other side without mishap. As the lady let go his arm, she said: "Thank you, sir, for your courtesy and protection."

"You are quite welcome, madam," he replied, "but I fear you overrate my protection—because I am blind!"

"And, touching his hat again, he turned and picked his way up the crowded sidewalk."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Visitor. "What a pity it is to be so poor," said a lady to a friend who was sitting in a car. "The Mother. "Oh, well, it is a great saving in car fares."

Smiling a canonic increases the effect and diminishes the cause.

Stealing a Ride.

Far back, near the end, I saw some boy and I ran slowly over the flat cars to wards them. Finding a cotton car, with a small door open, I lost no time in crawling into it; and I was soon snugly stowed away between two bales of cotton.

The brakeman came and twisted brake within three feet of me, but I was invisible. Presently he went on to the engine, at the end of the train. The long line of cars rolled steadily on, mile after mile, across the level prairie. Stations were far apart, but once or twice we stopped at one. I knew they were stations by the switching and backing. I could not have been more snugly fixed if I had had a berth in a Pullman. A grim satisfaction stole over me as I knew that I was rapidly cutting down the long distance to the big grade. Two hours slipped by, and gradually the monotonous rolling of the car-wheels lulled me into slumber.

I don't know how long I had slept, but I was awakened by a jolt of the car rather heavier than usual. I looked out of my window and saw that we were at the station; there was a whistling, and several houses were scattered along the track. "Everything is lovely," I thought; and, withdrawing from my cotton-bales, I calmly waited. There was the usual backing and shunting of cars, the shouts of brakemen, and other signs of station activity.

Suddenly it occurred to me that the roll of car-wheels seemed unusually long for the car to be stationary. I looked my head out again. The train was rolling by on the main track; my cotton car had been switched off on a siding, and I was in danger of being left. I took but a second to leap to the ground and seize an empty cattle-car of the main line. It was a narrow escape.

The frost falling through the open top of the car chilled me, and I danced a jig to keep warm. Violent of warm body, punishing meals, and the luxurious drawing-rooms of wealthy people back in the East floated through my mind. What a contrast was my present situation!

Three thousand miles from home, beating my way in a cattle-car across the prairie; about to become a stranger on the Mexican border, with an escaped murderer for a guide and friend!—L. C. Bradford, in January Lippincott's.

All Bots.

"How does it happen, Jane," snatched the dog mistress, "that I see you leading that policeman with mumpskin in the kitchen last evening?"

"I forgot to plug the keyhole, mum."

"I fell over the rail," said the sailor, "and the shark came along and grabbed me by the leg."

"And what did you do?"

"I let him have the leg. I never disputes with a shark."

Harry. "Say, old man, I'm in a horn!"

Fred. "What's up?"

Harry. "I've got and got engaged to two girls. How the dickens am I going to get out of it?"

Fred. "O, that's easy enough. Just continue to get them together so that they can compare notes."

"He says that his life was ruined by two women."

"How was that?"

"One did not marry him, one did."

"I've quit playing chess with Mudge."

"Is he so atrocious?"

"Autocratic! He thinks he invented the game!"

He. Don't you believe that in the majority of divorce cases the woman was to blame?"

She. "Of course I do. She should never have married."

"I called Biggame a liar right to his face yesterday."

"Is that so? What did he say?"

"I don't know. I happened to be called away before he had time to reply."

Mother (to little Martin, who has been put to bed for misbehavior). "What shall I say if callers come this afternoon and ask where my little boy is?"

Martin (promptly). "Tell them you've got a little boy."

"I saw you talking to Suggs a while ago."

"For we were discussing the floor-civil question."

"What position did Suggs take?"

"That of a terrorer."

"I know that you take a great interest in current questions," said the Snake Editor to the Casual Caller, who had left the door ajar when he came in; "out in this sort of weather you ought not to make your views so conspicuous."

"I don't know that I gather your meaning."

"Well, I see that you favor the open-door policy."

"What was the result of the experiment of having handsome young women instead of the regular domestics pass the cushions?"

"It was a failure. After a few Sundays the young men found they were chipping in more money than they could afford and they quit coming to church."

Lippincott's Magazine.

The complete novel in the January issue of Lippincott's is "The Mystery of Mr. Ohio," by Miss Lippincott. The story is a tale of the Confederacy, and the plot is so uncommon that it would be unfair to the reader. "The other Mr. Smith" is a society story—but of the conventional kind—by Ellen Douglas. "John Bullard's Christmas," by Henry A. Parker, is a tale of practical philanthropy, personally administered. In "Black Feather's Throat" Joseph A. Atchafalaya deals again with the times when Indians tortured their white prisoners and burned them at the stake.

The history of an ill-fated enterprise, conducted by the wife of Maximilian of Mexico, is told by Lucy C. Lillie. Charles Cotesworth Pickensy reviews "The Great Debate of 1833," in which Calhoun bore a prominent part and was opposed by Webster. Dr. Felix I. Oswald offers "An International Study on Liberty," bringing out the widely differing significances which the word has to bear, or which the thing that is intended, by different races or sets of men. "Fin de Secolo Individualism" is brought to book by Gertrude Evans King. "A Reporter's Impressions" of work and incidents in the West some fifteen years ago—also supplied by J. L. Sprague. Under the caption, "Way I did not become a Smuggler," L. C. Bradford tells of an adventurous trip in Texas in 1873-4. The poetry of the number is by Miss Kiley Smith, Doris H. Goodale, Arthur D. F. Randolph, Charles G. D. Roberts and Harrison S. Morris.

Outing Magazine for January. Wholehearted, reasonable, and, as usual, superbly illustrated, Outing for January brings to us the merry jingle of sleigh bells, the ring of skates and the sport and pastime of the winter over. The contents are: "Mid Winter Madcaps" (poem), by Charles Turner; "A Christmas in Stockholm," by E. W. Sunders; "New Year's Day at a Hudson's Bay Fur Post," by W. Blandish Cameron; "A Hockey Match," by G. M. Gertrude; "The Lovers' Lane," by J. W. Oldie; "A Leapfrog in the Snow," by J. E. Parry; "The Skating," by J. E. Parry; "Florida Fishing Sketches," by W. T. Townsend; "The Yarn of the Yampa," by E. L. McGinnis; "Jack Rabbit Hunts and Drives," by David W. Fenton; "The Orange Lake Ice Yacht Club and Ice Rink," by E. L. McGinnis; and the usual editorials, poems and records.

The Workbox.

TO EMBROIDER THISTLES. To work the flower begin at the right side, under the deepest shade of purple—Japan blue; then two shades and make the edge red; then two shades in a lighter shade, follow with still lighter, and for the top edge again the deeper shade of purple on the left side of the flower. After these shades have been put in thread needle with one thread of medium shade and shade it into the deepest shade on both sides of the thistle.

TO WORK CHENILLE STITCH. Thread the needle with two strands of Japan blue, one light, one medium yellow; commence at the top end of the thistle, and work the stem and work it over, drawing needle that is not more than one-half as large around as a match, place the needle across the tip of flower and work over it very close satin stitch, over and over; when the stem is finished, take a
